

St Hugh's College

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

All Oxford colleges can boast of their distinguished history and St Hugh's is no exception. The College was founded in 1886 to offer an Oxford education to women, and the first students here had to fight hard for their education.

Things are different now, but the College still has a sense of its radical tradition, and of the importance of opening up Oxford to all who would do well here.

"Oxford is a world-class university, where teaching and research thrive alongside one another. It is made up of self-governing colleges, each of which admits students in a variety of subjects. Colleges offer teaching to their students as well as providing the majority of them with a home during termtime. Here we aim to give a taste of what makes St Hugh's such an exciting place to live and study."

Oxford works hard to make sure that all those who are bright enough to study here as undergraduates can do so, regardless of their financial situation. The University offers bursaries and financial aid, and St Hugh's supplements this with its own funds to support students."

Dr Lizzy Emerson, Senior Tutor

"We have the best of both worlds here – we get to live in beautiful surroundings and engage with the tradition and academic rigour that are so quintessentially 'Oxford', but St Hugh's also manages to be very relaxed. You can say a lot about a college by its attitude towards its grounds, and whether you can walk on the grass or not: at St Hugh's we have acres of lawns that are open to everyone and you will hear students here say that this symbolises the attitude of the college. It sounds like a cliché, but it really is true that we are an open, friendly community where you can feel absolutely at home."

Kirsten Short (Modern Languages, 2010)

"Happy moments are one of the pillars that keep the spirit uplifted during hard times; St Hugh's and Oxford are inextricable from my happiest."

Aung San Suu Kyi (PPE, 1964)

"If you're hardworking and like to be challenged, you would definitely benefit from studying here."
