The letter issued by the Appeal Committee to a student who had appealed against the decision of the Disciplinary Committee had been circulated and was received. The Appeal Committee agreed to uphold the decision of the Disciplinary Committee.

In response to a question from Dr Garnett, a discussion was held about the value of fining students without an established system of means testing available. The Dean noted that the JCR had previously proposed introducing community penalties, but had not been able to supply examples of how these might work, or good practice from other colleges. When College had considered community penalties previously, it was thought that they too were fraught with difficulties of equivalence, wasted time on the part of College staff, and problems with liability. Nevertheless, the Dean and Principal would be happy to consult the JCR and MCR and to gather any examples from other colleges. Fining is only one of the range of sanctions available, and is used in the context of students' financial situation where possible.
